

The image shows the front cover of an antique blotter. The cover is made of marbled paper with a complex, wavy pattern in shades of brown, green, and red. The paper is heavily worn, with significant areas of discoloration and loss of the top layer, revealing a lighter material underneath. There are several dark, irregular stains or holes, particularly along the bottom edge. The spine, visible on the left, is bound in a dark red, textured material, likely leather or cloth, which also shows signs of wear. The word "Blotter" is printed in a large, bold, black serif font, underlined, in the upper center. Below it, the word "Blotter" is printed again in a smaller, black serif font.

Case of Lichen.

The Patient has already had an attack of Small Pox. The cutaneous eruption now presented has lasted for a couple of weeks. This can hardly be called a case of skin disease, though it is likely to end that way. In all cases of cutaneous diseases, though not exanthemata, we may have febrile symptoms. The treatment will be addressed to the acute character of the disease: to the removal, if possible, of the morbid state of the skin. — If there be any organic cause: this may keep up the irritation. — Potions are tolerable.

Patient has been afflicted since last June. Previous to that time he had an attack of hemorrhoids. Otherwise he has enjoyed tolerable health. Has been accustomed, to some little excess, to the use of intoxicating drinks. Has been afflicted with an attack of dysentery for the last week. This is evidently a very chronic case. The Urine, upon examination exhibits no albumen consequently it cannot indicate any serious kidney disease. The diagnosis is entirely a provisional one.
There is no enlargement of the spleen or of the liver. Nothing to enlighten concerning the direct cause of the disease except a deep-seated pain. The patient has considerable pain in the stomach accompanied with flatulence. It may be a case, and probably one of irritation of bowels consequent upon an attack of hemorrhoids.

The left side is much more resonant on percussion than the right side. He has lately been troubled with an increased palpitation of heart. The dyspnea is bronchial.  John Pritchard. Patient has been afflicted three years. This abscess opened outside. Since that time he has been attacked with diseases of the Kidneys.

 Urine very high colored. Appetite is very fair. Patient has of late been frequently subject to fits of vomiting. From a sample of the vomit there is evidently a quantity of pus contained in it.
 Patient's appearance is not bad, though not robust. Patient has occasionally had nervous spells and his strength at times fails him. The abdomen is quite tympanitic. Bowels are well. The abscess has opened several times in the last four years. The last opening took place about a year ago. There is undoubtedly an accumulation of pus at present in the abscess, though it is not probable that it will open into the abdomen. The purulent expectoration may be owing to a pulmonary or bronchial

Saturday, January 14th, 1860 affection. There is not any enlargement of the liver patient.
The Heart is somewhat enlarged.
Percussion is not unusually dull on the left side of the Chest. The percussion on the back part of the chest is not by any means as clear as we generally find with it; but not remarkably dull.
The matter has probably found its way through the diaphragm into the lungs causing the purulent expectoration. The opening of the abscess by incision, cannot well be recommended at present.
Pulse is full and strong; though Patient is much debilitated.
There is no evidence of any inflammation of the stomach. Possibly the pus does enter the stomach from the lumbar abscess. The diagnosis is somewhat provisionally and a further history of the case will probably throw more light on it.

better at present. Last night the palpitation of the heart was very rapid. Appetite fair. Bowels tolerable. Menstrual discharge not very regular. The palpitation has been noticed for some four months. This state probably arises from an anemic state of the blood.
